

Singapore Management University

Institutional Knowledge at Singapore Management University

Research Collection Yong Pung How School Of Law

Yong Pung How School of Law

6-2020

Forum: Some misconceptions about the revocation of work passes

Benjamin Joshua ONG

Singapore Management University, benjaminjong@smu.edu.sg

Follow this and additional works at: https://ink.library.smu.edu.sg/sol_research

Part of the Public Law and Legal Theory Commons, and the Workers' Compensation Law Commons

Citation

ONG, Benjamin Joshua. Forum: Some misconceptions about the revocation of work passes. (2020). Straits Times. 1-1.

Available at: https://ink.library.smu.edu.sg/sol_research/3182

This News Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Yong Pung How School of Law at Institutional Knowledge at Singapore Management University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Research Collection Yong Pung How School Of Law by an authorized administrator of Institutional Knowledge at Singapore Management University. For more information, please email cherylds@smu.edu.sg.

Forum: Some misconceptions about the revocation of work passes

Benjamin Joshua Ong

JUN 28, 2020

Several work pass holders, including both blue- and white-collar workers, have recently had their work passes revoked after they breached safe distancing rules.

In online forums, I have seen several misconceptions about the revocation of work passes. In response, I would like to make three points about what the law is.

First, there is no law requiring that those who breach safe distancing rules must have their work passes revoked.

A criminal sentence (of a fine and/or jail term) is mandated by law if a court finds a person guilty of breaching the rules, or if the person pleads guilty. The decision to revoke a work pass is made at the discretion of an officer appointed by the Minister for Manpower (known as the Controller, Deputy Controller or Assistant Controller of Work Passes).

Second, revoking a work pass is not the only option available to ministry officers.

Instead of revocation, additional conditions can be attached to the work pass, such as requiring the employee to put up a bond that will be forfeited in the event of future reoffending. It is also possible for a work pass to be suspended instead of revoked.

Third, avenues of recourse are available to an employee who feels that a decision to revoke his work pass is unjustified.

The employee can appeal to the Minister for Manpower. If that fails, the employee can apply to court for judicial review of the decision to revoke the work pass. A lawyer may assist in taking these steps.

Judicial review is a process by which the courts determine the legality of government action.